10. STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE
Kingstown Barracks, forming a component of a defence complex in the Inter-War Art Deco style and containing army institutional buildings with a tower as the focal feature, hospital and the cottages, a jetty, a battalion camp site and a gun battery with supporting communication and observation structures, has cultural heritage significance for the following reasons:

the place was a substantial component of the 1930s national coastal defence fortification, being one of two remaining establishments in Australia from the 1930s. It thus represents the fear of a foreign invasion and the international defence strategies of the time; as part of World War II fortifications, it represents a system of defensive war activity and demonstrates the function of using ground based mid-twentieth century weapons and supporting surveillance for protection of a key place;

the place is one of two remaining defence establishments in Australia conceived in the 1930s and inherently reflecting international defence strategies of the time; the site contributes to an understanding of the military history of Western Australia by providing interpreted extant remains of the coastal defence fortifications, the 1930s type of army accommodation with the hierarchical segregation of personnel by rank, and the design style of an army institution in the years immediately prior to World War II;

the buildings are representative of 1930s army institution in the Art Deco style with semi-enclosed spaces and a tower as the focal feature; and, the site is valued by the community for educational importance having the ability to demonstrate a tangible link with a major international event.
